Case study of an IP raid

Thought Leadership • May 6, 2010

Binny Kalra recounts the challenges and dangers of search and seizure missions in India. A few weeks earlier a cluster of trading establishments was identified and investigated for dealing in counterfeit Ray- Ban frames. The traders were operating out of tiny shops in a congested wholesale market with narrow lanes and teeming crowds. Four establishments sold the goods to an investigator without invoices - a common practice in the vast unorganized Indian market. This article was published in India Business Law Journal May 2010. To continue reading, please contact us at email@anandandanand.com
